Abstract: The interconnectivity of nations and their economies have converted the global economy into a village where it is easy for nations within the global economic system to interact and explore investment opportunities. The paper identified among others the problem of selecting the right type of social investment or mix of investment that will benefit the community and give the organization maximum return, in some cases neglecting the communities to suffer after depleting their natural resources and left the land barren. Some of the findings are that Corporate Social Investment will improve the local economy, protect resources and create shareholders satisfaction. We recommend that the multinational corporations should embark on various corporate social investment while the Nigerian Accounting Board should create an accounting standard that will take care of its accounting system and subject part of the investment to tax exemption. The economic operational disturbances in Nigeria calls for this paper at this critical period.
