Title of Article: Deepening Democratic Values of Political Marketing with Games Theory.

Author(s): Worlu, R.E.

Outlet: “A Joint Publication of Department of Business Studies, Covenant University, Ota, and National Institute of Marketing of Nigeria (NIMN) Date of Publication: 2011

Abstract: A number of scholars in political marketing have noted that political marketing is a concept originating from a set of democratic values. These values are found in marketing, political and stakeholder theories (Banes 1996, Lees-Marshment, 1999; Scammel, 2003; etc). But our present study captures ‘game theory’ as another democratic variable of political marketing practice. Confirmatory factor analysis and structural equation modeling are used to establish the relationship between game theory and political marketing. The research findings which is based on a survey of political marketers, suggest that game theory explains a significant proportion of the variance in the degree of political marketing programme implementation. The paper concludes with respect to the explanatory power of game theory in the context of political marketing strategy.

Key words: democratic values, politics, marketing, game theory, relationship.