Abstract: The study examined how motivation to become an entrepreneur can help Nigerian women to be involved in decisions making process. The study showed that the significance of ‘educational’ and ‘family’ capital, an ‘internal’ orientation to social recognition as well as an ‘external’ environment characterized the deregulation of the economy and these affect women who want mainly. The study recommended that although government measures such as de-regulation which may, as yet be in small measures has started to work, the government can go a step further and identify entrepreneurs with characteristics that improve entrepreneurial skills and knowledge in women and provide them with the requisite help to get them started on the entrepreneurship route.
