Abstract: Employment constitutes the nerve centre of any consideration of the economics and social development of all countries. It is therefore, not surprising that worldwide governments usually emphasize employment creation and the maintenance thereof at the highest possible level. Employment is also one of the cardinal objectives in the political programmes and perspectives of countries. Nigeria as a nation had also being in the vanguard of employment creation since independence in 1960. Recent events and studies have shown that the country’s unemployment rate is growing to intolerable level. This article is designed to explore possible ways of improving the strategies for occupying workforce employment in Nigeria. After a critical analysis of the current situation and identification of the loopholes in the existing employment strategies of the country, the article went ahead to recommend improvement measures such as effective use labour market information and the improvement of the country’s infrastructure.
