1.1. SOC122 Introduction to African Societies and Cultures (2 Units)

This course studies the different societies found in the African Continent. It considers the various derogatory conceptions of Africa by earlier anthropologists. It examines alternative approaches to the study of African Institutions in African Context. It looks at the social institutions such as, economy, polity, religion, marriage and family and the functions they perform both in the past and in the present circumstance. The unique characteristics found in these societies are treated.
