

TMC321 - Leadership Development I (1 Unit)

This course examines the building blocks for leadership development in the context of providing an overview of the broad dimensions of leadership. The course also explores the enhancement of leadership traits and how power and influence qualifies the dynamics of leadership. On successful completion of this course, students should be able to: define leadership, describe a leader, explain few theories of leadership, state the various laws and principles of leadership, identify leadership traits, state the levels and domains of leadership, state the principles of power and influence in leadership, identify the features of personal leadership, relate the importance of capacity building in leadership development, identify what constitute the application of leadership, state the relevance of mentoring in leadership development.